The Propulsion Powered Pizza Pal!

Well, someone has to fly the spaceship! And that's where Retro Rocket Raphael comes in. He's studied the space missions of history—and the one he's most inspired by is that hallmark of American scientific conquest: July 20, 1969—Apollo 11's awesome moon landing. Hey, this masterful mission was about a lot more than bringing back moon dust to Earth. This was a time of overcoming seemingly insurmountable obstacles and of conquering a dream that man dreamt of for centuries. Ever since that momentous moment, Retro Rocket Raphael has always wondered: in those craters, somewhere, perhaps under some common chunk of moon rock, maybe there's an anchovy or two.
